

This week, Driving Vision News is pleased to announce the beta version of our new website, opening December 1st 2009. The new website responds to the chief wants and needs of our members with a freshly updated look and feel, plenty of illustrations, and an all-new interface and architecture for a superior user experience. There's easier access to reports and archived news. And there's even more to come; we'll offer DVN members a library of automotive reference documents which will not merely duplicate other libraries but rather assemble relevant lighting test results, reports, and outstanding publications from universities and labs.

Now that DVN has reached such a large professional community, with more than 8000 professional visitors/month, we will allow our Gold members, as a free service, to take advantage of this worldwide forum to present their company profile as well as their products & services. This will be done through a special platform opening on our new website starting January 2010. Our idea is to create some intimacy between members and promote contact and communication. We hope especially Tier 1 & Tier 2 suppliers will avail themselves of this unique opportunity to present their technologies and their latest innovative products and services.

Please take a look round the beta website and let us know your comments and thoughts!

Sincerely yours
